

PRIVACY STATEMENT

Automatic data collection and handling of identity attributes

The on-line service is open to all, and no registration is required to browse the pages. Parts of the site may require registration. No personal data is collected from users of the on-line service that would make it possible to identify an individual user. Statistical information on service use may be collected for the production of statistical information on the total number of users of the service, the most popular pages, the pages through which users entered and exited the service, and other such information. Google Analytics can be used for the collection of statistical information on the website. The data protection practices of Google can be read at <http://www.google.fi/policies/privacy/>

Identity attributes are stored for the technical implementation and use verification of the on-line service, as well as to support marketing and development. Only personnel dealing with these tasks are allowed to handle identity attributes, and only to the extent that their tasks require. Identity attributes must not be given to outsiders in situations other than those which are separately stipulated in legislation. Feedback, requests for contact, and other such matters can be submitted through the contact form. If a response is desired to the feedback sent through the contact form or by e-mail, the feedback should include contact information.

Messages sent through the contact form are archived in the service. Those sending feedback that includes personal information should make note that the data security of an unprotected information form or e-mail message is weak, and the confidentiality and protection of the information cannot be fully guaranteed. This should be taken into consideration especially when sending information that is sensitive with regards to personal privacy.

The website administrator maintains the register.
